Ofir Tzoubari has experience representing private equity sponsors, developers, capital providers, and other institutional clients in a broad range of commercial real estate transactions. He has a deep knowledge of various asset types, including health care and hospitality facilities, as well as industrial, retail, and multifamily residential properties.

Before attending law school, Ofir worked in commercial and residential real estate. He uses his background in these areas to assist his clients with a diverse array of general business transactional matters, such as financing and corporate and health care mergers and acquisitions.

Prior to joining Ice Miller, Ofir practiced real estate law at two global law firms, where he provided legal guidance regarding acquisitions, dispositions, and leasing and financing matters, as well as general corporate transactions.

Ofir graduated cum laude from Washington University School of Law, where he earned a Certificate in Business Law and was Primary Editor of the Journal of Law and Policy. While in law school, he completed a summer judicial internship in the U.S. District Court for the Eastern District of Missouri and served as a law clerk with a boutique St. Louis law firm.
