As a former IT systems engineer, Sid focuses his practice on the intersection of technology and law. Leveraging his past IT experience, Sid advises clients on matters related to U.S. and international privacy law, information technology transactions, cybersecurity, regulatory investigations, audit and compliance, and emergent technologies like blockchain and artificial intelligence (AI).

Sid also provides clients with incident response counseling for data breaches, ransomware, fund transfer fraud, hacking, and similar privacy and security matters. As a ‘breach coach,’ Sid recognizes the challenges clients face and helps them work through what are seemingly impossible and “bet-the-company” type events. Sid primarily focuses on large enterprises dealing with sophisticated threat actors, and complex incidents ranging from large scale data exfiltration, account impersonation and takeover, to nation-backed threats.

In addition, Sid works on litigation disputes for clients, including privacy class actions stemming from privacy and security incidents, rights of publicity matters, and similar actions dealing with cybersecurity, biometrics, consumer and privacy rights.

Sid is also an adjunct professor at the Indiana University Maurer School of Law.
